THE PROBLEM

Most acquisitions miss the goals the buyer set for them

70–75%

of acquisitions fail to deliver their stated goals, across roughly 40,000 deals over 40 years[1]

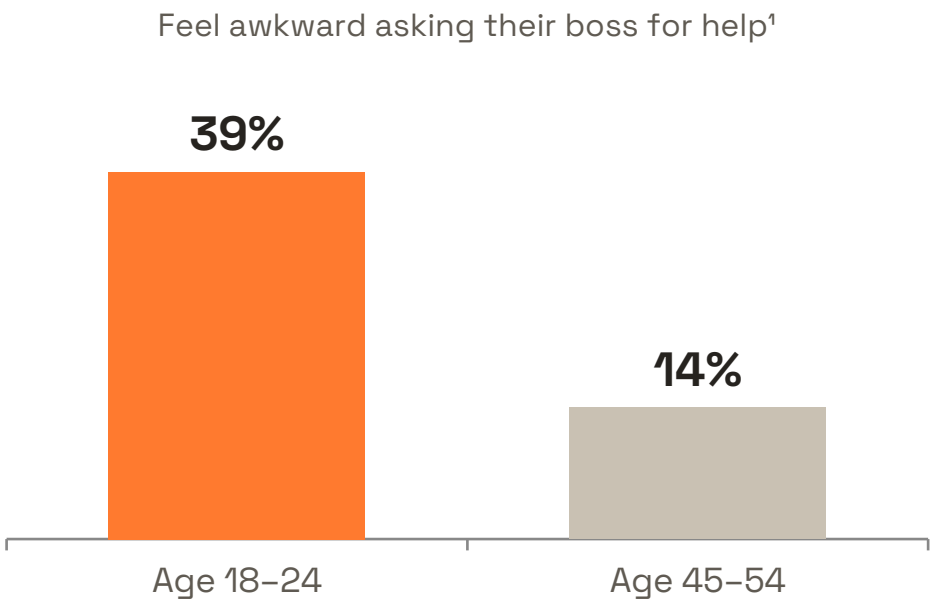

The people closest to the work

Analysts and associates build the models and read the documents, and they are the least likely to ask when something looks wrong.

[1] Baruch Lev and Feng Gu, analysis of ~40,000 acquisitions, reported in Fortune, Nov 2024.

WHY PEOPLE STAY QUIET

Young staff are almost 3x as likely to feel awkward asking for help

26%

of leaders make their teams feel safe to speak up[2]

#1

Feeling safe to speak up was the top trait of Google's best teams, out of 180 studied[3]

WHAT BANKERS DO INSTEAD

Bankers already go around official channels, and regulators fine them

$2.5B+

in SEC and CFTC fines since Dec 2021 for work talk on WhatsApp and texts that firms never recorded[1]

1. 30+ firms fined including JPMorgan, Goldman Sachs and Citi
2. Private chats are where the real questions go
   because they feel safe
3. Deal Desk keeps the safety
   and adds a sealed record for compliance

HOW IT WORKS

A junior asks, two matched seniors answer, and identities stay hidden

1

Attach a deal

Pick it from the firm's deal database, with its files

2

Names become codenames

"Northwind" becomes "Project Falcon (Buyer)" before anyone reads it

3

Routed to 2 seniors

Matched by deal type and sector

4

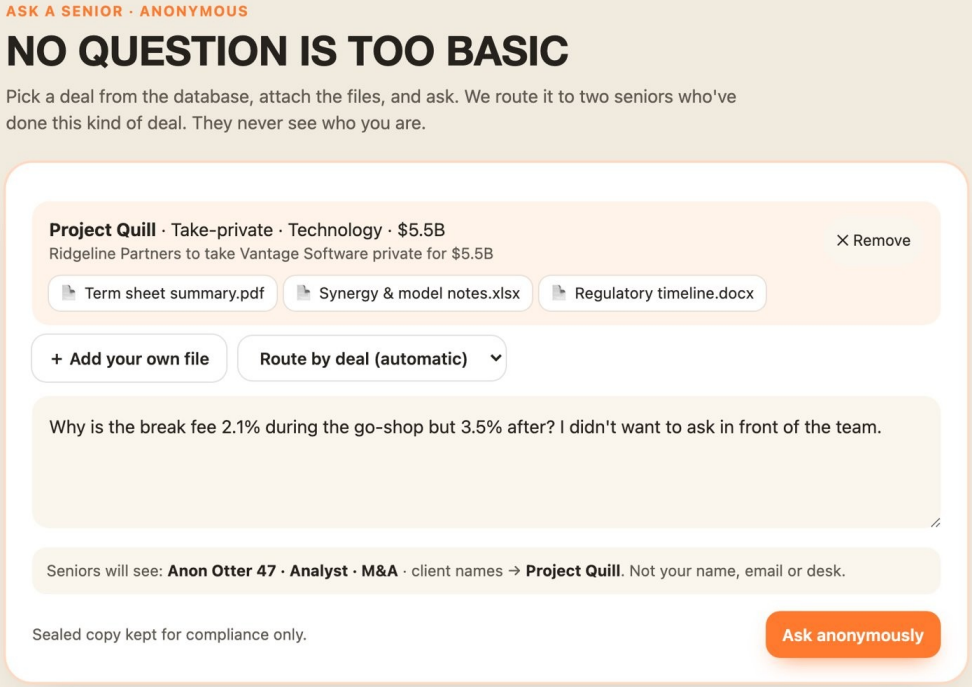

Answer comes back

Bottom line, their words, why, and what to watch

Everyone sees only an anonymous handle and a level. Compliance keeps a sealed copy it can open if regulators ask.

THE PRODUCT

A junior attaches the deal and asks in plain words

Deal database
10 deals: mergers, LBOs, spin-offs, hostile bids, earnings events

Files come along
Term sheet, model notes, timeline, or the junior's own file

The junior sees what seniors will see
An anonymous handle and level, never a name

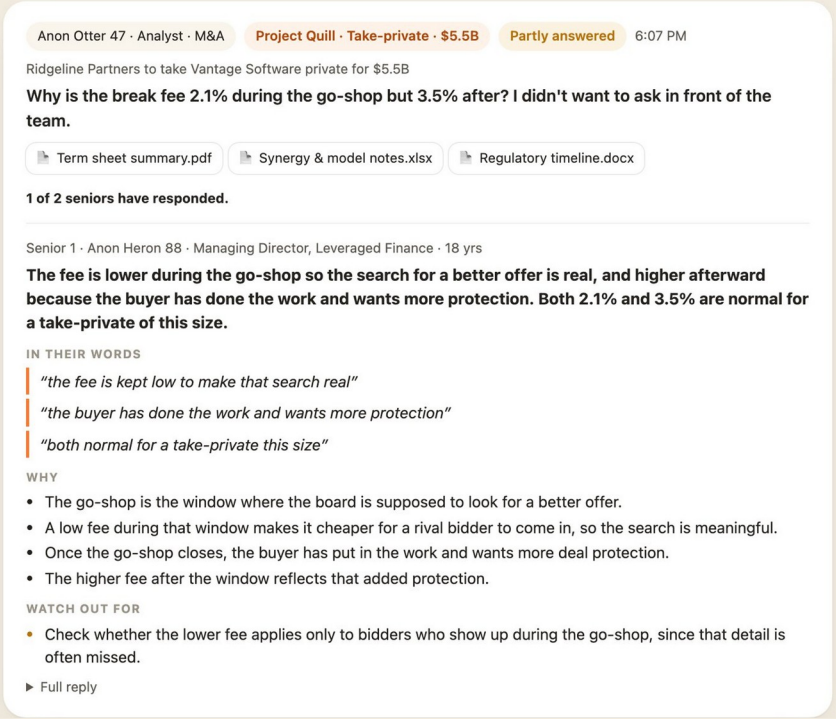

THE ANSWER

Seniors reply in plain words, and the junior gets a structured answer

Formatted like a Sense AI result
Bottom line, quotes, why, watch-outs

Seniors write normally
Claude turns a quick reply into a clear answer

Two views per question
A summary shows where the seniors agree

DEMAND

Professionals already use anonymous channels at work

7M+

verified professionals use Blind, an anonymous work app most popular in tech, finance and consulting[1]

53%

of 28,747 professionals say waiting on answers interrupts their work[2]

49%

often answer questions they have already answered before[2]

WHAT TESTERS TOLD US

Finance testers worry about names leaking and about IT approval

“It was mentioning names, and it’s not supposed to mention names in that summary.”

Tester, on an AI summary at work

“to use a new application or artificial intelligence, they have to go through IT. And IT has to approve it”

Same tester, on adopting new tools

What we built in response: client names become codenames before any senior reads a question, and Deal Desk runs inside the bank with a sealed record for compliance.
